Valued Clients

Last week we practically gave away cut stones. Today to give our rough opal buyers a nice chance I send you a picture of this Andamooka Painted Lady, it weighs 13.75oz.

This stone has absolutely magnificent reds across the face of the stone which is 3.5" wide and the best part of 1" thick. What a surface of red gem opal for such little money. You can't see all the face because it is still covered in sandstone and a bit of crud so the people who like grinding a little and polishing this is a beautiful piece. It could be cut into matching pendant, earrings and ring or if you are a specimen person it could be left just as a specimen. I see the patch goes around the corner for about 1.5", the crud is so thick on top of it you can't see whether there is any colour there. I tried to snip it just in case it's beautiful red under there but I stopped, I didn't want to ruin it.

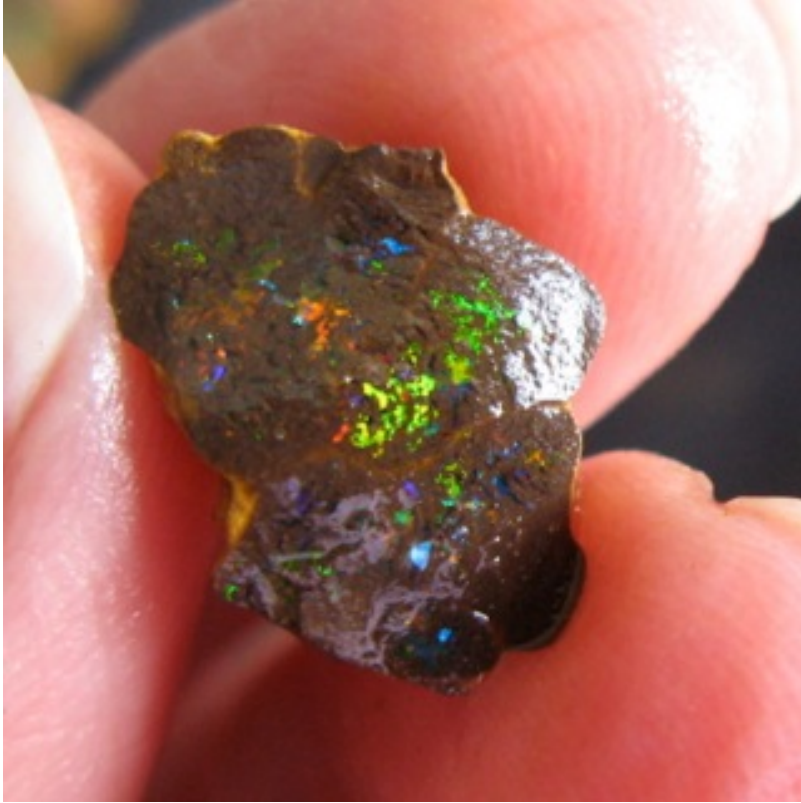

There is one beautiful Boulder Matrix gem it weighs .427oz only $15. From the outside of the stone you really can't see anything. I was happily classing some matrix opal when I snipped this corner and boy, the colours just jumping out. I include the little piece that I snipped off, there is a nice little stone to be cut out of that as well, it's not included in the .427oz but it is included in the $125. Just think for how many million years this opal has been covered in crud and deep under the earth, just an hour ago I snipped it off and the colour saw the light of day for the first time. If it had been you hiding in there and finally released like a genie from a bottle wouldn't you be happy. I wish I had more of these Boulder Matrix pieces to offer you but unfortunately I don't have them in this gem colour. We really should cut it into an opal bead but I thought I'd let one of our clients have the pleasure of cutting it.
